"I asked him," said Miss Anthony, "if he did not think women ought to have the same rights and privileges as men. He answered—well. I don't think anybody could tell which way it was he answered, but it was very po-

Miss Anthony's clever way of expressing the President's concommittal responses excited much laughter in the audience. Miss Anthony then said that she relieved the United States marshal of the disagreeable duty of introducing the delegates. Several of them made remarks to the President. One said that she should never be satisfied until a president should be in the white house whose wife should be an avowed woman suffragist. The treasurer of the association said that she should never be satisfied until a woman occupied the white house as president. "So we came away," said Miss Anthony, "having been treated with the utmost politeness and as finely pleased as are the numerous delegations of men of all classes who go to call upon the President." Miss Anthony then told how many times that same performance of calling upon the president had been gone through with, and always with the same result. She concluded that if the women callers had represented a voting constituency they would have made a greater impression and have received more positive answers.

Mr. Edward M. Davis was introduced and Mr. Edward M. Davis was introduced and made the report of progress in Pennsylvania. Mr. Davis is a pleasant-faced old gentleman, of medium size, with full gray beard and mustache and thin grey hair. Miss Anthony introduced him as the son-in-law of the venerable Lucretia Mott, and nearer to that lady than any other person. Mr. Davis stated that Pennsylvania was very sleavy state and was than any other person. Mr. Davis stated that Pennsylvania was a very sleepy state and was quite slow in the matter of woman suffrage. He gave a detailed account of the unsuccessful attempt of a lady to practice law in Pennsylvania. He said the woman suffragists of Pennsylvania had incurred odium and became unpopular because they preached nothing else but woman suffrage. He seemed to think, however, that their course was right. He suggested that the woman suffragists go in with the greenback-labor party and thereby prevent either the republicans or democrats from electing a president, and throw the choice into the house of representatives.

She wore a black browde silk dress, and a black bonnet tied with broad white ribbons covered most of her white hair. She read an address from manuscript, looking up frequently and out through her spectacles at the audionce in a benignant way, as if all the people present were her grandchildren. She spoke very deliberately and clearly, without any attempt at oratorical effect. She gave a long clear, and detailed history of the efforts of the women of Scotland to obtain the privilege of voting. They have succeeded in obtaining the right to vote in the school and municipal elections, and in the choice of parochial guardians. They now have to obtain only the right to vote for members of parliament.

Mrs. Shattuck sang a song.

Mrs. Berths H. Ellsworth, of Lincoln Center, Kau, read the report for Kausas. Mrs. Ellsworth was a small, black haired woman, with a sallow face. The face was intelligent, but neither healthy nor happy. Her report was full of statistics concerning the work of women in the professions and trades, and in such parts of government as the men allowed to them. She said that the woman of Kansas were peculiarly fortunate, in that the constitution of the state gave them nearly equal property rights. She closed her report with the recitation of an original poem.

Mrs. Nelson, of Minnesota, read the report of Sarah Berger Stearus, vice president of the association for Minnesota. Some remarks made by Miss Anthony concerning the necessity for speaking loud enough to be heard induced Mrs. Nelson to pitch her voice on a painfully high key. Mrs. Nelson's face was more Scotch than that of the Edinburgh woman, Mrs. Welstood, and her general appearance was that of a well-to-do farmer's wife. The report consisted of a history of the temperance work of the Minnesota women and of their various unauccessful attempts to make the Minnesota men give them a chance to vote. After reading the report Mrs. Nelson made a bright extemporanceous speech. She told in it why she wanted the ballot. She said she was a missionary and farmer. She remarked that she had raised some calves on her farm and thought herself in much better business than in raising boys, who, when they grew up and had a mustache, should undertake to teach thought herself in much better business than in raising boys, who, when they grew up and had a mustache, should undertake to teach their mother how to be a woman. A number of other sharp flings at the men were received with much applause and laughter. Like the previous speaker, she closed with the recitation of a poem.

The afternoon session closed with the reading, by Mrs. Harbert, of the preamble, decis-ration of principles, and resolutions, published in THE REPUBLICAN vesterday morning, and a brief discussion upon them.

There were not seats enough in the hall for the people who came to hear the speeches in the evening. As usual, there was a great majority of ladies in the audience, but there was a fair sprinkling of the people whom the speakers have charged with an unjust and selfish absorption of all the privileges of the

The first speaker was May Wright Sewall, of Indianapolis, Miss Sewall's subject was, "The Forgotten Woman." The burden of the "The burden of the worst of his proceedings argument was that in most of his proceedings man omitted to remember that there were any women in existence. She reviewed the action, up to date, of the present do-nothing congress and urged that there was nothing in the Congressional Record to show that the legislators had such weighty subjects on their legislators had such weighty subjects on their minds as to make them forgot womon. Mrs. Sewall alluded, with much sarcasm, to the careful manner in which congressmen have dodged everything which might be of importance. The public officials, she urged, found nothing better to do than to oppose the desire of one woman to be a steamboat captain. The debating societies of the country, she found, were busying themselves with prehistoric man to the exclusion of contemporary woman. Several congressmen had wearily told her that they were sick of this congressional life, because there was now no opportunity for a they were sick of this congressional life, because there was now no opportunity for a man to make a reputation. She assured them that in this great moral reform there was abundant opportunity to acquire the reputation, as the emancipator of woman, that Abraham Lincoln acquired as the emancipator of the negro.

When Miss Sewall is at home, in Indianapolis, she teaches school, edits two columns of the Sunday edition of the Indianapolis Times, and delivers parlor lectures upon woman suffrage. It would seem that a woman must be strong in body as well as mind to fulfill all these duties, and Mrs. mind to fulfill all those duties, and Mrs. Sewall appears not to have suffered either in body or mind from the exercise. She is one of the very few plump delegates in the convention. She is an easy speaker, steps to the extreme front of the platform, and keeps her eyes upon the audience, neither reading a lecture nor consulting notes. She has a clear lecture nor consulting notes. She has a clear voice, expressive face, and talks with the confidence and self-possession of a woman thoroughly conversant with her subject, theroughly in earnest, and accustomed to public speaking. She wore a black brocade velvet dress.

The Rev. Pheebe A. Hanaford, of New The Rev. Pheebe A. Hanaford, of New Jersey, was introduced, piaced her manuscript upon the reading deak behind which she stood, and proceeded to read a lecture upon 'New Jersey as a Leader." The reverent lady is every inch a preacher. Men who have been accustomed to preach a sermon or two every week for years acquire certain peculiarities of manner and speech which instantly betray their calling whenever they begin to address an audience. Mrs. Hauaford showed that lady preachers are equally creatures of habit. The familiar and affectionate manner of leaning the hauds upon creatures of habit. The familiar and affectionate manner of leaning the hands upon the deak or pulpit, the step backward with hands clasped in front while the speaker puts forth some especially strong sentence, the easy gesture of hand and head together—all these were noticeable in Mrs. Hansford. Some things in the manner Mrs. Hanaford. Some things in the manner of speech, also, proved a woman accutatomed to public prayer as well as public addresses.

Mrs. Hanaford is a well-formed lady of perhaps 40 or 45 years, with black waving hair most of which is ceiled at the back of the neck and surmounted by a big comb. A short curl, however, fell down behind each ear. She were a becoming and close-fitting black dress, and a broad watch ribbon with gold buckle appeared conspicuously at her waist. Gold-bowed spectacles added to her ministerial appearance. It was only on rare occasions when Mrs. Hanaford abandoned her manuscript, stepped away from the desk took off her spectacles, and eloquently extemporized for a moment, that dark eyes, full of enthusiasm, could be seen. She has a broad and high forehead, straight nose, small mouth, and determined chin. She read rapidly and clearly a lecture the chief point of which was that the right of suffrage was shared equally by the men and women of New Jersey under the original constitution; that women exercised the right to vote in the early days of the state, and that this right was never denied to them until a new constitution was adopted, in 1814. This fact made New Jersey a leader. Mrs. Hanaford sulfogized some of the leaders of the woman suffrage movement who had originated in New Jersey, and finished with an eloquent plea for equal rights for woman.

sey, and finished with an eloquent plea for equal rights for woman.

Mrs. Mary E. Haggart, of Indiana, spoke upon the question, "Why do do not women vote?" This question she answered thus: "Because the world has been told that the woman suffrage movement is not a reform in the true sense of the word. However that may be," and Mrs. Haggart, "it is a return to fine the proposition and a reminder that may be, and Mrs. Haggars, it is a return to first principles and a reminder that natural rights have no sex." Another answer was that "the world has been told that for a man to be womanly is to less his influence, and for a woman to be manly is to less her influence."

Mrs. Haggart admitted the latter portion of the proposition to be true if manhood con-

of the proposition to be true if manhood con-sisted in drinking whisky, smoking and chewing tobacco, spitting, swearing and fighting. In this manner Mrs. Haggert wont through the long list of objections which the opponents of woman suffrage have made, and for each one she had a ready answer. Mrs. Haggart is said to come from a family of orators and she upheld the reputation of the orators and she upheld the reputation of the family. She appeared to have perfect command of language, never hesitated for a word, and put words together into pointed sentences in a wonderful way. She talks very much as Anna Dickinson used to talk in the days when she was at the height of her fame as a lecturer. The speech was alive with logical argument, sharp sarcasm, and picturesque metaphor. It was sometimes eloquent, often pathetic, and always original. Mrs. Haggart is a short and stout lady of middle age. She looked rather sleepy when the speech began, but soon convinced everybody that she was thoroughly awake, and certainly there were no sleepy eyes among the audience while she spoke. She was frequently applended, and at the close of the speech was warmly congratulated by the ladies on the platform and by many in the audience, who came forward for that purbose.

EAST WASHINGTON.

A Fire Alarm Bell and Another Engine Wanted in That Section.

A great deal of complaint has lately been made by a number of prominent citizens of East Washington that there is but one fire alarm bell in that section, which is on the house of No. 3 engine, corner of Delaware avenue and C street northeast. When the avenue and C street northeast. When the wind is blowing from the northeast or southeast it can only be heard a few squares east. Christ church was suggested as a good point for a new bell station. The bell on that church can be distinctly heard all over the southeastern and most of the northeastern section. Several old residents stated that it would be well also to place a fire engine further east than where the No. 3 engine is located. There are a number of school buildings and much valuable private property, besides the several valuable private property, besides the several government buildings in the navy yard, at stake. It was also stated that several fires have occurred lately on Eleventh street and other localities in the extreme eastern section. In most cases the property was entirely de-stroyed, because the nearest engine had to travel more than a mile-ever bad roads in some instances—to get to them.

After the transaction of the regular order of business, the following named gentlemen were elected delegates to named gentlemen were elected delegates to the archdiocesan convention of the Catholic Young Men's societies of Baltimore and Washington, to be held in the former city on Monday, March 24, and to be followed by a celebration of the 250th anniversary of the landing of the Maryland pilgrims: Ed. J. Haunan, D. I. Murphy, Edmond Mallet, M. B. Johnson, and Thomas H. Byrnes, alternates, Thomas J. King, Wm. Richards, John Bingham, E. W. Sturdy, and J. F. Riley. The literary and musical programme consisted of piano solos and songs by Prof. Riley. The literary and musical programme consisted of piano soles and songs by Prof. Bloise; a reading by Mr. John T. Fallou; recitations by Prof. Roach, of Baltimore, and an original paper by Mr. F. McNerhany on the question, "How to make the weekly meetings of the institute more instructive and entertaining," There was quite a large attendance of members, and the exercises were exceedingly pleasant and interesting. President Hannan extended an invitation to the members of the institute and their lady friends to attend a free lecture to be given in the hall of the institute this evening at 8 o'clock, by Dr. W. H. Benson, on the important subject, "How to Prevent Consumption." The Union Veteran Corps.

The regular monthly meeting of the Union Voteran corps was held at their armory, Masonic temple, last evening. Considerable interest was manifested, over sixty members being present. The quartermaster having reported that all the uniforms were in the respective lockers, the board of directors were authorized to effect an insurance on the same. The board presented a set of rules for the government of the lockers, which were adopted, and a printed copy ordered to be placed in each locker. The forthcoming fair of the cadets, to commence March 31, was brought to the notice of the meeting and the comrades requested to accord their earnest and hearty support toward making it a success. Arrangements were also perfected for the musical and literary entertainment and informal hop to be given on March 26. The Army of the Potomac rounion, to be held at Brooklyn next June, has become a matter of considerable interest to the corps, and measures were instituted looking to a participation of the corps upon that occasion. Railroad Meeting.
A meeting of the directors of the Washington, Ohio and Western railroad was held in Alexandria yesterday. The mortgage on the road necessary for issuing bonds for the ex-tension of the line, which was decided at a previous meeting, was perfected, and bonds for the requisite amount to carry out the project will be issued. It is proposed to ex-tend the road about seventy miles, the esti-mated cost being $25,000 per mile. The road is now in a presperous condition, and the present line is being thoroughly repaired and put in order. A new iron bridge is being constructed over Difficult run.

The Growlers.

Merry gong and music, with happy speech, made up the programme of Washington lodge of Growlers last night. The occasion was a social session, and the cozy club rooms were filled with invited guests, including several theatrical people. "Between the acts" refreshments were served with lavish hand by committees appointed by Chief Growler Harry C. Bowers. Several laughable jokes were recited by members of the lodge. Many recomment, merchants have recently idned. prominent merchants have recently joined the lodge, which is in a flourishing condition.

One of the Candidates.

John W. Mason, of West Virginia, who is seing urged for the position of assistant sec retary of the treasury, has been prominent in West Virginia politics for many years. He served in the federal army, is about 45 years of age and bears a striking resemblance to the late President Garfield. He took a leading part in the last presidential conven-tion, and was a candidate for the forty-eighth congress, coming within seven votes of elec-tion in a district which had hitherto given large democratic majorities.

A Masquerade at Guenthler's. A pleasant masquerade party was given last evening in the hall in Guenthler's park, on E, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets outheast. Prof. Naecker's orchestra rendered music. Dancing was continued until an early hour this morning. At the intermission a splendid supper was served. Several very costly costumes were worn by some of those present and certain very comic characters were represented.

TEMPERANCE IN GEORGETOWN. Address of Col. Babenck Before the Alliance at Dumbarton Avenue Church. A large and enthusiastic temperance meeting, under the auspices of the district alliance, was held last night in the Dumbarton Avenue M. E. church, West Washington Mr. Brand presided over the meeting, which was opened by singing "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," and a prayer by the Rev. John Edwards. Rov. J. J. G. Webster, pastor of the church, made a short address in refer-ence to the petition to congress protesting against the passage of the ninth and twelfth sections of the license bill. The principal against the passage of the ninth and twelfth sections of the license bill. The principal speaker of the evening was Col. Babcock, who made an earnest address, during which he exhibited a long array of figures collated from the internal revenue reports, showing in how short a time the value of all the railroads, farms, houses, and manufacturing interests of the country was drank up. The logic of temperance is facts patent to the boy on the street, the judge on the bench, and the preacher in she pulpit. The duties of life are social and reciprocal, and only those who successfully combated with evil can expect to wear the crown; therefore should the friends of the cause exert themselves to the utmost to save their boys, their homes, and their country. Rev. J. McKendree Riley was then introduced, and made a characteristic temperance address, in the course of which he was frequently applauded. Miss Minnie Ewan sang two selections in exquisite manner, and the "Soldiers' Chorus," under the leadership of Mrs. William H. Pope, added greatly to the pleasure of the evening. The president of the alliance, Mr. Brandt, explained the purposes of the organization; and the pledge being passed among the audience, a great many sigued the pledge of the alliance.

Harmony Council, Legion of Honor. Abner's hall presented a bright and pic-turesque scene last night on the occasion of a ception and ball by Harmony council, No. 191, American Legion of Honor. The stage was almost hidden behind masses of bright flowers and the dark green foliage of tropical plants, and the ceiling and wall were claborately decked with flowers and bunting. Among the guests of the evening were the following members of the grand lodge of Maryland: Past grand commander, W. L. Coves; grand vice commander, H. F. Steiner, of Frederick; grand secretary, Dr. D. F. Pennington, of the Baltimore Day; grand guide, John Langford; grand secretary, T. B. Teakle; grand warden G. R. Renner. Of the grand lodge of the district there were present Grand Commander Boernstein and daughter; Mr. John Nash, wife, and daughter; Grand Secretary E. F. O'Brien, wife, and daughter; Eupreme Reporter Watson J. Nowton and Mrs. Newton, and Grand Orator Charles S. W. Willis and lady. Many young ladies and gentlemen participated in the dance until the gray streaks of morning began to appear in the flowers and the dark green foliage of tropical streaks of morning began to appear in the

The Knights of Pythias. The session of the District Grand ledge, Knights of Pythias, last night at Grand Army hall, was devoted largely to culogies of the late J. T. Coldwell, who was past grand chancellor of the order. The special committee cellor of the order. The special committee appointed for that purpose reported a series of resolutions in regard to the death of Mr. Coldwell. They were discussed and adopted by the meeting. A charter was granted, upon the application of a number of prominent business men and others, for the institution of a new lodge in this city, to be known as "J. T. Coldwell lodge." Every lodge in the district was represented at the meeting.

Sparkling Water Division.

A report has been issued by Sparkling Water Division, No. 18, Sons of Temperance, of the navy yard, through the patriarch, Mr. W. K. Webb. It states that the division has only been in existence three weeks, during which time the membership has increased to forty ladies and gentlemen.
